

What Capital Really Is

ing Which Produces What Can Be Turned Into Money

Capital is simply the surplus product of human labor.

To live, to begin with, one must perform a certain amount of work, even if it is only pulling out of a tree. The surplus which work is necessary to obtain life, one keeps on working must produce something over and above the absolutely needful, something not necessary at the moment, but available for use at some time, or by somebody else. That surplus is surplus, and is the foundation of capital.

Obviously, unless such surplus be saved, man would remain a savage. Obviously, therefore, all man's progress depends on surplus product, and capital.

The Bolshevik, the Communist, others, below against capital, do it in either ignorance or care, except where they have a purpose to mislead. A intellect like Lenin, of course, better, but used the roar. In its pronouncement on reach- tism in 1916, Lenin was speci- ally. We will break absolutely with," he declared. Of course he that he was talking nonsense. When he wrote the words with capital. The paper he wrote on capital. The table before him, hair he sat in, were capital, so his clothes, his pen-knife and out.

We all be clear about this, in minds. If you have a million

Lenin nor any other Marxist or Communist would question that. What is your difference to have property which you can use for a million dollars? Say, a ship, or a teacher, or, or a hotel. Obviously, then, if you own such things, you are a capitalist. Obviously, all property is capital as much money, seeing that it can be turned into money. So, the carpenter's shop is capital, the plumber's shop is capital, the butcher's cleav-

Things may be but capital just as money in bank, or as railroads or steel works. And ob-viusly all human progress depends on such equipment, whether big or small.—Ottawa Journal.
